Walls – Louis Tomlinson

Nothing wakes you up Like waking up alone And all that's left of us Is a cupboard full of clothes The day you walked away And took the higher ground Was the day that I became The man that I am now But these high walls, they came up short Now I stand taller than them all These high walls never broke my soul, and I I watched them all come falling down I watched them all come falling down for you For you Nothing makes you hurt Like hurtin' who you love And no amount of words Will ever be enough I looked you in the eyes, saw that I was lost For every question "why" You were my "because" But these high walls, they came up short Now I stand taller than them all These high walls never broke my soul, and I I watched them all come falling down I watched them all come falling down for you Falling down for you So this one is a thank you For what you did to me Why is it that 'thank you's' Are so often bittersweet I just hope I see you one day And you'll say to me Oh, oh But these high walls, they came up short Now I stand taller than them all

These high walls never broke my soul, and I I watched them all come falling down I watched them all come falling down for you Falling down for you Nothing wakes you up like waking up alone
