Ordinary Days - Paradise Lost

Breathing life, as true as honest work Breathing life, a truth for all its worth You want to seem to be as fragile as can be I want to roll inside That shell you call a mind Breathing life, as frail as insincere Breathing life, too cold to shed a tear You want to seem to be as fragile as can be I want to see the things That I'm supposed to see I want to know the fear That sets inside of me I want to breathe the air, Like I was meant to on ordinary days You want to seem to be as fragile as can be I want to see the things That I'm supposed to see I want to know the fear That sets inside of me I want to breathe the air, Like I was meant to on ordinary days
